

This cultural project was very interesting by the fact that we have ourselves had to find people to interview.

It was for us the occasion to speak English in France and to face the opinion of foreigners on us.

At first, the most amazing thing was the number of nations present here in Paris. We met Americans, Australians, Germans, Argentinians... and all with their own accent.

Then after have interviewed people, I noticed that all stereotypes are not still occurring in the mind of foreigners. Even if the image of the "frencheese", the man with his cigarette, baguette, cheese and beret, is well-known, it is more comprehended like a caricature and not the true.

Thus the ideas that French people have a moustache are no more stereotypes. However, some other like French people are cold, unfriendly and sometimes impolite are still true.

Secondly, I notice that some foreigners were astonished by the level of technology of everyone. The fact that everyone in the street have a smartphone, and use more than the phone and sms service has surprised some foreigners.

To conclude, it was interesting to see that almost foreigners are opened and ready to give their opinion.
